

Abstract – James Whitehorn

This talk will discuss the Cambridge Kampala Antimicrobial Stewardship and Infection Prevention Project. This is a partnership project run between Makerere University and Cambridge University Hospitals. Our activities have focused on infection prevention and antimicrobial stewardship within the context of a busy Ugandan obstetric and neonatal hospital. I will discuss the challenges the project faced during COVID-19, the benefits to both sides of the partnership and future plans.

(James Whitehorn is a consultant in infectious diseases and microbiology at Cambridge University Hospitals. He is the Cambridge lead for this project)